Nemours now offers a multidisciplinary specialty clinic for children diagnosed with Williams Syndrome. The program provides comprehensive clinical care, counseling and education to patient families living with Williams Syndrome. Our team — led by Dr. Gul Dadlani, chief of pediatric cardiology — uses a coordinated approach to deliver the best possible care to help manage this complex and ongoing condition.

For patient families who participate in the Williams Syndrome Clinic at Nemours Children’s Hospital, specialty appointments will be scheduled for the morning and afternoon. Families will then come together midday to enjoy lunch, education and a roundtable discussion.

Depending on your child’s needs, specialties available during the clinic day may include audiology, behavioral health, cardiology, endocrinology, ENT, gastroenterology, genetics, imaging, nephrology, neurology, ophthalmology, orthopedics, urology or other pediatric services.

Specialized pediatric cardiac anesthesiology is available for any diagnostic, medical or surgical procedures that may require general anesthesia. When possible, our team will also coordinate these procedures to lessen exposure to anesthesia and risk of complications.
